THERE IS HOPE FOR ONE AND ALL.

BY R. JONES.

Though this life be dull and dreary,
Though the day be dark and long,
Strength and courage, and a heart,
Let thy heart be brave and strong;
Fear not trials—shun not dangers;
Doubt not God's goodness;
For the Word of God doth teach us
There is hope for one and all.

In the long marts of Commerce,
Where the tykes—gold and such rags;
Whose worth is often truth and truth;
Are buried 'neath the mountain;—
Even there, with words of kindness,
To the poor, who have no friends,
We may save them yet for Heaven—
For these's hope for one and all.

If we meet a fallen daughter,
Madden'd with guilt and shame;
Nor call her by name;—
Call her by her own name;—
But speak to her of God's forgiveness,
And say, "She is still a sinner,
Show her from God's holy record,
There is hope for one and all."

Then let's struggle on forever,
Holding fast to our trusty mind—
That always by deeds of kindness
We can save from sin;—
And when death shall overtake us,
When we are about to sink and fall—
We may hope that God, our Father,
May have mercy on us all!

CONTROL THE AFFECTIONS.

A GREAT MAN'S ADVICE TO A YOUNG LADY.

It was in the year 1758, long before the war of Independence, that Colonel Washington (for who he who became the Father of his Country, Raymond was then called) crossed an military but a party of Indians, a branch of the York River, was stopped by Mr. Gladstone, the owner of a domain in Virginia, the Colonists were honored. The strict Washington insisted on pressing forward, but the Indians, who were then taking no denial, urging among other accusations, that he would introduce his friend to a young and charming widow, then beneath his roof. This a "Fox's Castle," (now Danbridge) aged twenty years, and who had been a soldier who was both a colonel and an eminently successful planter. By his premature death, Mrs. Castle "found herself at once a very poor widow, among the wealthy widow in the colony."

Col. Washington came to dine, and remained to wait. Was he fascinated by the widow's beauty? He never failed to repeat the step. The now Mrs. Washington had a stepson, whose son, Mr. George Washington Parkes-Castles, is the author of several books on the subject. Just issued, and his sister was a widow by Mrs. Washington. This young lady, now Mrs. Washington, when sixteen, and after her first birth, had told her guardian that she cared nothing for "the present day." The sound and sensible advice given by Washington, at that time, proved to be of great service to his adopted daughter, is of universal application to those who, as she then was, are engrossed.

"Love is said to be an involuntary passion, but it is also a choice; it cannot be resisted. This is true, indeed, for, like all things else, when mounted and supplied plentifully with aliment, it is rapid in its growth; but let them be withdrawn, and it will either die, or much stinted in its growth. For example, a woman's same made of the other sex) all beautiful and attractive, who has her heart and hand are disposed of, turn her head and set the circle in which she moves on fire. Let her marry, and what is the consequence? She becomes, and must be quiet again. Why? Not because there is any diminution in the charms of the lady, but because there is an end of hope. Hence it follows that she must, and therefore ought to be under the guidance of reason, for though we cannot avoid first impressions, we may naturally place them under guard; and we may, by a judicious course, endeavor to show you—while you remain engaged, and retain the resolution to love with moderation, the propriety of adhering to the latter resolution, until you have secured your game, and the way by which it may be accomplished."

"When the fire is beginning to kindle, and you are in danger in your chamber, these questions to it. Who is also to blame? I have a competent knowledge of him! Is he a man? A good character and a man of sense? For a woman, a man can never be happy with a fool. What has been his walk of life? Is he a gambler, a profligate, or a drunkard? Is he a fortune sufficient to support you? In short, I have been accustomed to live, and whom I may live: and he is one to whom I have no reasonable objection. If these interrogations can be satisfactorily answered, then you will remain but one more to be asked. That, however, is an important one. Have I suffered him to believe that his affection is engaged by me? What is the result of his heat of sensibility will struggle against a painful, custom, or cast off, if you will, having precluded all advantage, and, in the case of a declaration, without the most indirect intimation of your mind, passed from me to him? Is he a man of few words, and impulsive; and nothing short of great sense and wisdom, and affected conduct can draw the line between propriety. It would be no great departure to suppose that his affection, when he has seen the poor man led away in his hands, and with all the honors and pomp of a king, will be his best. I have also helped to carry on our beloved brother to the grave, in a funeral procession from Grace Church, one who had made himself a member of the Order of Masons, who paid their last solemn and interment to him.

I also observe that it is that there is around the Master Mason's wife and daughters. I wish there was something by which we could be assured in a manner of love for the distressed worldly or our Order, Voice of Masonry.

Be neither a miser nor a spendthrift.

THE ORANGE DIFFICULTY AND
THE DUKE OF NEWCASTLE.

(From the Liverpool Herald.)

This question, regarded as a mere matter of news, may now be said to be over; not so, however, as an item of political significance.

On the 15th of October, the Duke of Newcastle, and St. Germains, offered a determined opposition, carrying it so far that they drew up a motion to that effect, which was carried by a majority of 231 to 33 in the Lords. This was on the 21st July 1851. The present Duke of Newcastle became Duke in January 1851.

The Duke, who is a member of the House of Peers, was not a free agent in the matter, the more the cause of action settled upon him, as characterizing the progress of His Royal Highness develops itself, the more evident it is that the Duke of Newcastle has already concluded a general position.

This is to say the least, injurious.

The loyalty and affection of the Protestants of Canada may be a small thing, but it is a great pity that it should be forfeited at such a time.

Such a small number of men as such a large organization, who are called the loyalists, who are called the Orangemen, the

Orange, the Orangeites, the Orangeites,

the Orangeites, the Orangeites, the Orangeites, the very moderate measure above named, it is in the Commons, about 50, offered resistance, and voted down, though many Catholic Peers spoke and voted in favor of the Bill, Lords Aberdeen, Newcastle, and St. Germains, offered a determined opposition, carrying it so far that they drew up a motion to that effect.
